Henry Brougham, (1778 - 1868), later Lord Chancellor, was an early champion of parliamentary reform who advocated the enfranchisement of large towns, the reduction of rotten boroughs and the grant of the franchise to copyholders, leaseholders and all householders.

In this speech to the local freeholders he targets Lord Lonsdale's control over Westmorland's two parliamentary seats: "To rank, and wealth, and power, like his, I have not the shadow of pretension - but I differ from him in one other particular...Had I his possessions, aye, or the tenth part of them, I would never allow a son of mine to take eleven or twelve hundred pounds a year from the public."
