EXPOSITION LE JUIF ET LA
FRANCE AU PALAIS BERLITZ
Paris Institut d'Etude des Questions Juives

Original illustrated wrappers, 25 x 21, 30pp. [2]. Cover illustrated by Rene Peron. Text in French

In September 1941, an exhibition opened in Paris called "France and the Jew." The exhibition was organized by the Institute for the Study of the Jewish Question (IEQJ) and funded by the Nazi propaganda office. It was designed to convince French people of the necessity of antisemitic laws, including the possible removal of Jews from France. Posters, press articles, and radio programs all tried to attract Parisians to the exhibition. (USHMM Website)

Just like the exhibition "Der Ewige Jude" (The Eternal Jew) held in 1937 at the German Museum in Munich, this exhibition presented the Jews in a stereotypically racist manner, with facial representations corresponding to classic anti-Semitic depictions, such as the hooked-nose or dirty hair. The exhibition drew on the work by George Montandon, a professor at the Parisian School of Anthropology and author of the work "Comment Reconnaître un Juif ?" (How to recognize a Jew?), published in November 1940.

32. THE JEWISH AGENCY FOR PALESTINE DOCUMENTS RELATING TO THE McMAHON LETTERS London Jewish Agency for Palestine 1939

Original wrappers, 24.5cm, 20 pp. Colour map foldout of "Arab Territories and Palestine" at the time. This is the Jewish Agency's response to the British Government's publication of the "McMahon Letters" published earlier the same month (March 16th, 1939). The McMahon Letters include the correspondence between Sir Henry McMahon (His Majesty's High Commissioner in Egypt) and Hussein Sharif of Mecca between 1915 and 1916. They represent a series of letters that were exchanged during World War I in which the British government agreed to recognize Arab independence after the war in exchange for Hussein's launching the Arab Revolt against the Ottoman Empire. There was an ongoing debate as to the nature of the agreement which led to the publication of a report in 1939 by the British Government. This is the Jewish Agency's response and assessment of the correspondence. [ref: 22611]
