[MACEDO, José Agostinho de]. Amorte da illustrissima, e excellentissima senhora D. Constituição, e destruição do monumento: discurso funebre do Zé Goibinhas, recitado em a Caverna Maçonica do Grande Oriente Pedreiral, perante a Augusta Sociedade: escripto por tachigrafia, e pillhado a dente, pelo Anão do Assobios. [Colophon] Lisbon: Em a Nova Impressão da Viuva Neves e Filhos, 1823. 8°, 8 pp. Caption title beneath typographical headpiece. Some page numbers slightly shaved. In good condition.

The Anão dos Assobios is the whistling dwarf, a pseudonym sometimes used by Macedo. Goibinhas was apparently a rabbi. Both these figures reappear in other works by Macedo.

José Agostinho de Macedo (1761-1831) was a prolific writer of prose and verse, best known for his aggressive pamphleteering on behalf of the absolutists: 'Ponderous and angry like a lesser Samuel Johnson, he bullies and crushes his opponents in the raciest vernacular . . . his idiomatic and vigorous prose will always be read with pleasure' (Bell, Portuguese Literature p. 282). His high literary reputation among contemporaries proved ephemeral.

As a young man, Macedo caused so much trouble within the Augustinian Order that he was unfrocked in 1792, but an influential friend helped him retain his ecclesiastical status by obtaining a brief of secularization. Soon becoming a leading orator, he was named royal preacher in 1802.

Macedo is notorious for his arrogance in literary matters: he condemned as worthless Homer's poems, which he had never read in the original, and believed his own epic Gama, 1811 (reworked and published as O Oriente, 1814), could have taught Camões how Os Lusíadas should have been written. When the public reception for O Oriente was less than enthusiastic, he published Censura dos Lusíadas, a detailed and virulent critique of Camões. In Os Burros, a satirical poem published 1812-1814, Macedo skewered a host of men and women, living and dead. Macedo's provoked Barbosa du Bocage's satirical poem Pena de Taliao: 'Expõe no tribunal da eternidade / Monumentos de audácia, e não de engenho'

NEVES, José Accursio das. Continuação das cartas aos portugueses Lisbon: Na Typografia de Simão Thaddeo Ferreira, 1823. 4º, pp. [65]-112, (1 blank l.). Woodcut Portuguese royal arms on title page.

This is a fragment, consisting of Cartas IX to XIV, of 27 'Cartas' contained in Neves' Cartas de hum portuguez aos seus concidadãos sobre diferentes objectos de utilidade geral, e individual, 2 volumes with 216 pp., 1822-1823. The text appeared again in the author's Obras completas, [1987?]. An attempt to foster the political economy while opposing the new constitutional system, there is much derogatory comment on the French and American revolutions, buttressed with references to Rousseau, Voltaire, Raynal, classical authors, and the Bible. On p. 69 is a reference to Brazilian independence. This is further discussed in 'Carta XII: o desmembramento da monarquia' on pp. [89]-96.

Accursio das Neves (1766-1834), a noted economist, held various government posts; his writing was primarily concerned with the political implications of commerce. Elected a member of the Real Academia das Sciencias de Lisboa in 1810, he was a defender of conservatism, being one of the principal supporters of D. Miguel in the Côrtes of 1828. As a conservative, he had been opposed to the liberal ideology behind the revolution of 1820, and the 1822 Portuguese constitution. On May 14, 1821, he lost his government offices, only to be reinstated in June 1823. Nevertheless, Neves was elected deputy to the Côrtes of 1822. The years 1821-1828 saw the maturing of his political-economic development. Despite the conservative approach to politics, Neves favored industrialization and free trade (while defending a moderate protectionism). As a result of his support for Miguelismo, Neves became an obscure figure with the triumph of the liberals at the end of his life. Today he is regarded as one of the most brilliant Portuguese thinkers and most lucid prose writers of his age, a precursor of modern economic theory in Portugal.

GARRETT, João Baptista da Silva Leitão d'Almeida, António Barreto Ferraz de Vasconcellos, José Maria Xavier d'Araujo, et al. Discursos e poesias funebres recitados a 27 de Novembro de 1822 em sessão extraordinaria da Sociade Litteraria Patriotica celebrada para prantear a dôr, e orfandade dos Portuguezes na morte de Manoel Fernandes Thomaz, primeiro dos regeneradores da patria. Lisbon: Na Typographia Rollandiana, 1823. 4º, 36 pp. Typographical ornaments. In very good condition.

FIRST EDITION; a second appeared in Lisbon, 1883. This volume contains speeches and poems on the death of perhaps the most important leader of the 1820 Portuguese liberal revolution. The oration by Almeida Garrett occupies pp. [3]-12, that of António Barreto Ferraz de Vasconcellos pp. 13-24, and the one by José Maria Xavier d'Araujo pp. 25-30. Also included are sonnets and an ode by António Pinto da Fonseca Neves, Rodrigo Pinto Pizarro de Almeida Carvalhães (signed R.P. Pizarro), and João da Silva Braga.

Fernandes Thomaz (born 1771 at Figueira, Foz do Mondego) was a leader of the revolution of 24 August 1820 in Porto, and a member of the Junta Provisional formed shortly thereafter to govern the country. Along with Ferreira Borges and Silva Carvalho, he was one of the 'great names of the revolution' (Oliveira Marques, History of Portugal). Beginning in January 1821, he was active in the constitutional Cortes, which produced the Constitution that was approved on 23 September 1822. His death on 19 November was a blow to the liberal cause, which was struggling against an absolutist backlash after Brazil had declared its independence.

Almeida Garrett was one of Portugal's greatest romantic writers and a passionate adherent of the liberal cause. Here he gives a rousing eulogy that focuses on the events of 1820-1822: 'Raiou o grande dia 24 de Agosto o primeiro da liberdade Portugueza; infatigável não descançou desde então: havia entrado na arena, não voltava sem ter prostrado o grande inimigo com quem travára: este inimigo vós o conheceis, e bem mal que todos o conhecemos! era o Dispotismo!' (p. 8).

According to Innocência, only a few works by Almeida Garrett predate this speech: Versos ao Corpo Academica, O dia vinte e quatro de Agosto, and Retrato de Venus, all published in 1821, plus a weekly periodical, O Toucador, whose seven issues appeared in early 1822. The Retrato de Venus brought Almeida Garrett to the public eye: he was attacked for immorality and impiety, and a heated controversy raged in the press was followed by a court battle from which the author emerged triumphant in 1822. Soon after the 1823 counter-revolution, the Patriarch of Lisbon issued a pastoral letter interdicting the poem on pain of excommunication.

Almeida Garrett (1799-1854) was a man of great talent and far-reaching interests: 'As journalist, founder and editor of several short-lived newspapers, as a stylist and master of prose, his country's chief lyric poet in the first half of the nineteenth century ... and greatest dramatist since the sixteenth; as politician and one of the most eloquent of all Portugal's orators, an enthusiastic if unscientific folk-lorist, a novelist, critic, diplomatist, soldier, jurist and judge, Almeida Garrett played many parts and with success' (Bell, Portuguese Literature pp. 288-89). He was raised to the rank Visconde de Almeida Garrett in 1852.

António Barreto Ferraz de Vasconellos (Aveiro, 1789-Aveiro, 1861) offers in his oration a more complete biography of Fernandes Thomaz, including a mention of the Gomes Freire conspiracy in 1817. Vasconellos fought in the Batalhão Académico during the Peninsular War and took an active part in the events of 20 Augusto 1820. He was rewarded with the position of Desembargador da Relação do Porto. His fortunes varied over the next decade as the liberals came in and out of power. In 1847 he was named Visconde da Granja.

José Maria Xavier de Araujo (Villa dos Arcos de Val de Vez, 1786-ca. 1860) joined with Manuel Fernandes Thomaz, Ferreira Borges, and others who took part in the events of 24 August 1820. Elected deputy to the constitutional Córtes, he became a notable member of that assembly. In 1823 he was obliged to emigrate, and did not return to Portugal or to public service until 1834, when after the triumph of the liberal cause he obtained a judicial post in the Tribunal do Commercio. In 1850 he was named Juíz da Relação do Porto. Innocência states that his Revelações e memorias para a historia da revolução de 24 de Agosto de 1820, Lisbon 1846, offer 'particularidades curiosas sobre o assumpto' (V, 54). In this oration he focuses on the events of 1817-1819 leading up to the revolution at Porto in 1820.

António Pinto da Fonseca Neves (Porto, 1784-Lisbon, 1836) contributed a sonnet 'a morte do Demosthenes portuguez, Manoel Fernandes Thomaz.' Neves was convicted of taking part in the conspiracy of Gomes Freire in 1817 and sentenced to ten years exile in Mozambique, which was later changed to serving with the army at Montevideo. Back in Lisbon by 1821, he soon suffered more persecution for his liberal ideas, being confined for a considerable time in the Castelo de São Jorge. Finally released in 1833, he returned in 1836 to serve as governor of the Castelo, but died the same year. He published a volume of Obras poeticas, Lisbon, 1822, and several short works, including two directed against José Agostinho de Macedo. (See Innocência I, 237 and VIII, 286.)

Rodrigo Pinto Pizarro de Almeida Carvalhães (Villar de Maçada, 1788-Villar de Maçada, 1841) contributed a sonnet in which he compares Fernandes Thomaz to Benjamin Franklin ('o Francklin Portuguez idolatrado'). He served in Maranhão under Francisco Homem de Magalhães Pizarro and went on to become a member of the royal council, a brigadier in the army, as well as minister and secretary of state for War. In 1834 he was chosen to represent the Douro in the Córtes, but after a heated controversy that brought into play some of the most notable orators there, his election was annulled. In 1835 he was granted the title Barão da Ribeira de Sabrosa. Almeida Garrett wrote a eulogy for him. Pinto Pizarro published numerous works on the politics of the 1820s-1830s. Innocência notes that he achieved 'depois de morto maior popularidade do que em vida teve' (VII, 179).

In the final poem (an ode), João da Silva Braga compares Fernandes Thomaz to George Washington and Cincinnatus.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of this pro-absolutist pamphlet in favor of the Vilafrancada.

José Daniel Rodrigues da Costa (1757-1832), a native of Leiria, was a fervent supporter of D. Miguel. He held many government posts in Portugal and was a prolific writer: his works (the earliest of which dates to 1777) were very popular and often reprinted during his lifetime. Innocência uncharacteristically declines to catalogue all the author's works: 'Parece-me desnecessario além de difficil, apresentar aqui um catalogo geral de todas as suas producções.' Rodrigues da Costa was a poet of arcadismo, using the name Josino Leirense in the Nova Arcádia. His narrative poem O balão dos habitantes da lua (1819) is considered the first Portuguese work of science fiction

Tear of about 4 cm. at lower margins beginning with leaf A3, touching some text but not affecting legibility. In near good condition.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of a reasoned attack on the idea of representative government, the 1822 Portuguese constitution, and constitutions in general, in celebration the restoration of D. João VI's full powers. On May 27, 1823, D. Miguel led the Vilafrancada revolt to replace the Constitution of 1822 with an absolute monarchy. D. João (who had sworn to uphold the Constitution) sided with his son and was acclaimed king a second time, on June 5, 1823, with all his former absolute power. On p. 9 is a brief reference to Bolívar and the Republic of Colombia.

Frei José de Lima (Porto, 1759-Porto, 1847), an Augustinian Hermit, mestre and pregador geral of his order, honorary royal preacher, and corresponding member of the Academia Real das Sciencias de Lisboa, had been silent for three years because preachers had been ordered to praise the new constitution and he refused to do so. With this oration he is finally able to condemn it as he feels it deserves. He mentions the Freemasons and the Templars as part of a conspiracy to remove long-established rights of the Portuguese monarchs. Lima was notable during the period 1828-1833 for the vehemence of his advocacy from the pulpit of the absolutist cause of D. Miguel I. This is the earliest of five works by him cited by Innocência.

In very good condition.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION. Parente founded the first newspaper in Pará.

The author (Belem do Pará, 1798-Lisbon, 1866), obtained a law degree from Coimbra. He wrote from a liberal perspective. Departing Portugal for Brazil in 1823, he served as deputy for his native Pará from 1842 to 1845, returning to Portugal in 1851. An erudite authority with a store of knowledge about mathematics, philosophy, religion, geography, history, and dead languages, he was said to be able to quote entire books of the Old and New Testaments, and to write in Latin with considerable fluency. In his later years he suffered from increasingly profound madness.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION.

The second Conde de Ega (Funchal, 1755-Lisbon, 1827) succeeded to his title in 1771. He was Gentil Homem at the court of D. Maria I and of D. João VI, Lord of the Palácio da Ega, in Junqueira, Lisbon, alcaide-mor of Soure and Guimarães, comendador de Lagares (Penafiel) of the Ordem de Cristo, deputado da Junta dos três Estados, Inspector-Geral dos Provimientos do Exército, and Ambassador at Madrid in 1806. His second wife, Juliana Maria Luisa Carolina de Oyenhausen de Almeida, daughter of Karl von Oyenhausen-Gravenburg and de Leonor de Almeida Portugal de Lorena e Lencastre (4.ª Marquesa de Alorna), an outstanding beauty, had an affair with Junot, Napoleon's general who had invaded Portugal, bringing much odium upon the Condes de Ega. They withdrew to France with Junot, and Napoleon granted the Conde a huge pension. He was condemned to death in absentia, but absolved in 1823.

COSTA, José Daniel Rodrigues da. O temporal desfeito ou os impostores naufragados, esta obra he dedicada ao Serenissimo Senhor D. Miguel, Infante de Portugal. Lisbon: Na Impressão de Victorino Rodrigues da Silva, 1823. 4º, 31, (1) pp.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION. Poetry in praise of absolutism, in opposition to the Constitution of 1822, representative government, liberalism and freemasonry.

José Daniel Rodrigues da Costa (1757-1832), a native of Leiria, was a fervent supporter of D. Miguel. He held many government posts in Portugal and was a prolific writer: his works (the earliest of which dates to 1777) were very popular and often reprinted during his lifetime. Innocência uncharacteristically declines to catalogue all the author's works: 'Parece-me desnecessario além de difficil, apresentar aqui um catalogo geral de todas as suas produções.' Rodrigues da Costa was a poet of arcadismo, using the name Josino Leirense in the Nova Arcádia. His narrative poem O balão dos habitantes da lua (1819) is considered the first Portuguese work of science fiction.

Typographical headpieces on p. [3]. In very good condition.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION? Roque Francisco Furtado de Mello (born 1771) had been removed from his duties as a desembargador at Porto, largely on the basis of a dispatch written by João Pacheco de Mello. Among other malfeasance, João Pacheco de Mello had accused Roque Francisco Furtado de Mello of stealing 5% of the income intended for orphans in Ponta Delgada. Furtado de Mello defended himself in the newspaper

Astro da Lusitania and in this pamphlet, Exposição justificativa ..., in which he protested his innocence of charges that he had been a corrupt magistrate during his 9-year tenure (1806-1815) as juiz de fora on the island of São Miguel in the Açores.

Light browning. In good to very good condition. Old ink manuscript pagination ('645-653') in upper outer corner of each page, and in upper outer corner of folding table recto. (4 ll., 1 folding table). $60.00

FIRST and ONLY EDITION. The Assembleia Portuense was a popular social club in Porto; as late as 1888, Appleton's Guide noted, 'Foreigners are admitted to the Assemblea Portuense and the Feitoria Ingleze, first-class clubs.' This volume includes a list of officers and directors, followed by a speech by Eduardo Moser, the club's secretary, on membership, finances, the library, servants, social events, and the construction of a larger dance hall. The folding table gives income and expenses for the previous year.

Reprint of a 1641 work printed in Lisbon by Louraço de Anvers. It has sometimes been attributed to P. Manuel de Galhegos. However, as Innocência points out, the privilege at the beginning was granted to Father Nicolau da Maya de Azevedo (1591-164?), making him the better candidate for author. He was parish priest of São Mamede in Lisbon. It was he on 1 December 1640 who carried the image of Christ out of the Sé cathedral of Lisbon in the procession which acclaimed the Duke of Bragança as D. João IV, King of Portugal. This is one of the earliest texts relating to the restoration of Portuguese independence on 1 December 1640.

Ink manuscript postal address-presentation inscription to the Conde de Tondella, Fundão, with circular postal mark dated '5 OUT 02' from Fundão on rear wrapper. 16 pp. $35.00

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of this parliamentary speech attacking the government of Ernesto Rodolfo Hintze Ribeiro.

General Sebastião de Sousa Dantas Baracho (Torres Novas, 1844-1921), was Presidente do Supremo Tribunal Militar, of the Supremo Conselho de Justiça Militar and of the Conselho Superior de Promoções. He was presidente da comissão encarregada de rever a legislação criminal militar, and comissário régio para a delimitação da África Ocidental from 9 July 1891 to 9 March 1892, in accordance with the Luso-Belgian treaty regarding the boundaries between the Belgian Congo and Angola. Honorary Aide-de-camp to kings D. Carlos and D. Manuel, he was elected deputy for the Partido Regenerador in 1881 for Torres Novas and reelected in 1884, 1887, 1889 and 1890 for Santarém; nominated Par do Reino on 29 December 1900, he was a frequent critic of the regime. In 1911 he was elected deputy to the Assembleia Constituinte for Figueira da Foz.

Provenance: The title Conde de Tondalla [or Tondela according to present orthography] was created by decree of King D. Carlos I dated 23 February 1899, in favor of José de Aragão da Costa Lacerda da Vitória (1844-1908), descendent of the Barões de Tondella. He was a great landowner, and Mayor of Fundão. The title became extinct upon his death. See Nobreza de Portugal e do Brasil, III, 439.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of this masonic tribute to Gomes Freire de Andrade on the 86th anniversary of his death.

Gomes Freire de Andrade, (Vienna, 1757-Lisbon, 1817) was a field marshal and officer of the Portuguese army who served France at the end of his military career. He had served in the Russo-Turkish War, the War of the Pyrenees, War of the Oranges and Napoleonic Wars. His execution for conspiracy in 1817 on orders from Marshal Beresford. This aroused public protests and intensified anti-British sentiment throughout Portugal, leading to the Liberal Revolution of 1820 and the fall of Beresford, who was prevented from landing in Lisbon upon his return from Brazil.

Initiated into Freemasonry before 1785, probably in the Vienna Masonic lodge Zur gekrönten Hoffnung (To Hope Crowned) an organization to which he is known to have belonged together with Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart by 1790, Freire de Andrade attaining the rank of Worshipful Master of the Regeneration. A meeting held in his home in 1801 led to the organization of Portuguese Freemasonry, with the creation in 1802 of the Grande Oriente Lusitano, the oldest Portuguese Masonic lodge, of which he became the 5th Grand Master (ca. 1815-1817). Freire de Andrade also belonged to the Portuguese Military Lodge, Chevaliers de la Croix in Grenoble, between 1808 and 1813.

Avellar Brotero (1744-1828) fled to France in 1788 to escape persecution by the Inquisition, and there published his Compendio de botanica in order to earn his living. It immediately established his reputation as a botanist, and upon his return to Portugal in 1790 he was given the chair of botany and agriculture at Coimbra. His two best known works, Flora lusitanica, 1804, and Phytographia Lusitaniae selectior, 1816-1827, were the first lengthy descriptions of native Portuguese plants. As director of the botanical gardens at Coimbra and Ajuda, he was responsible for their reorganization and enlargement.

Provenance: The entire volume was owned by Francisco António Rodrigues de Gusmão (1815-1888), physician and author, perhaps the most significant collaborator of Innocência Francisco da Silva in the course of the writing of the still indispensable Dicionário bibliographico portuguez. He presumably commissioned the binding. It was purchased in the auction of books owned by Rodrigues de Gusmão and Mário Tomás da Costa Roque (1932-1983), distinguished physician, the author of books on the history of medicine and on printing history, an important auction catalogue with 1,320 lots, sold 1 and 2 April, 1998. See Silva's and Pedro de Azevedo, Biblioteca de Francisco António Rodrigues de Gusmão e Mário Tomás da Costa Roque, Lisbon: Silva's, 1998. The introduction to the catalogue contains an extract from the Dicionário bibliographico about Rodrigues de Gusmão, and an essay by Joaquim Veríssimo Serrão about Costa Roque. First Separate Edition, amplified from a serialized version which had appeared in Moderado, numbers 25-28. A second edition appeared the following year, same printer, same place. The author distributed both pamphlet editions gratuitously in large numbers, which probably accounts for their subsequent rarity.

José Joaquim da Silva Pereira Caldas (Caldas de Vizela, 1818-Braga, 1903), journalist, essay writer, Arabist and amateur archeologist, studied mathematics, natural philosophy and medicine at Coimbra University. A prolific writer and liberal political activist, he taught mathematics and Arabic at the Liceu de Braga.

affecting first 8 leaves. Printed on thick paper of high quality. Overall in good to very good condition.

FIRST EDITION [?] of this description of actions against Algerian pirates off the Strait of Gibraltar in 1810. Born in Lisbon, 1768, Ferreira Lobo was an artillery officer posted to Bahia. Having switched over to the navy and risen to Chief of Division, in 1810 he commanded a squadron which crossed from Brazil to the Straits of Gibraltar. Later he helped put down the Republican revolt in Pernambuco in 1817; after 1822 he adhered to the cause of Brazilian Independence under D. Pedro I, and became a vice-admiral. He was chief of the Brazilian Squadron which blockaded Argentine ports in December 1825 and led the victorious naval combat of February 9, 1826. Ferreira Lobo died in Rio de Janeiro, 1846.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of this proposal for reforming the Portuguese treasury's procedures and accounting practices and for instituting various provisions of the liberal Constitution of 1822. Pedroso de Almeida first describes and criticizes the Pombaline system (instituted in 1761) for its disorganization and lack of accountability, then proposes various reforms, including an administrative reorganization and the introduction of double-entry bookkeeping. He closes (pp. 20-23) with seventeen specific recommendations for making 1823 a transitional year between the old and new systems.

Pedroso de Almeida (1795-1853) was born in Lisbon and served as Director da Secretaria do Tribunal de Contas. He later expanded the ideas presented here in his Theoria da administração da Fazenda (Lisbon, 1834).

First Edition in Portuguese of the present translation of Exposicion de los hechos y maquinaciones que han preparado la usurpacion de la corona de España, y los medios que el Emperador de los Franceses ha puesto en obra para realizarla. This immensely popular work, signed at Madrid on September 1, 1808, was the work of Pedro Cevallos, Secretary of State to D. Fernando VII, and gives a detailed, eyewitness account of Napoleon's treatment of the Spanish king. It appeared in 1808 in several Spanish, French and English editions, as well as in Portuguese and Greek. There was another Portuguese edition of 103 pp. the same year by the same printer, and there were four editions in Portuguese of 80 pp. of a different translation printed by the Imprensa Regia in Lisbon. A Rio de Janeiro, 1809 edition also exists. American editions were printed in 1808 in Boston, New York and Baltimore.

D. José Sebastião de Almeida Neto was born on 8 February 1841 [according to Wikipedia; according to this book the date was 20 January] in Lagos, Portugal. Educated at the Seminary of Faro, he received the sub-diaconate on 20 September 1862 and the diaconate on 21 May 1864. Ordained on 1 April 1865. Neto he entered the Order of Barefoot Friars Minor on 15 August 1875, adopting the name of Joseph of the Sacred Heart, but continued to work in the parish church of St. Sebastian until 1879. Nominated Bishop of Angola e Congo by D. Luís I of Portugal on 30 July 1879, he was nominated by the King of Portugal to the Patriarchate of Lisbon on 12 July 1883, with papal confirmation as patriarch occurring 9 August. Pope Leo XIII raised him to the rank of cardinal in the consistory of 24 March 1884. As the Patriarch of Lisbon he presided over the wedding of Prince Don Carlos with Amélie of Orléans, in the Church of St. Dominic in Lisbon on 22 May 1886. He participated in the conclave of 1903 that elected Pope Pius X. In November 1907 Neto resigned and retired to a convent of his order. Due to religious persecution with the deployment of the first Republic he fled to Spain and as of 30 May 1913, was residing in the convent of Villarino of Ramallosa. On 4 September 1913, at Sigmaringen Castle, he conducted the marriage of the exiled King Manuel II of Portugal (whom he had baptized, and given first communion and confirmation) and Manuel's second cousin, Augusta Victoria of Hohenzollern. He died 7 December 1920 in Villariño, Galicia, Spain. On 9 December, his body was transferred to Tui, Galicia. The body was received by Bishop Manuel Lago de Tuy, several canons of the cathedral chapter and the Franciscan community of the Colegio de San Antonio. The coffin was placed on a catafalque in the middle of the cathedral. On 10 December, at 11 am, Mass of requiem was sung by D. Manuel Vieira de Matos, Archbishop of Braga. King Alfonso XIII of Spain ordered military honors for the Cardinal. After the Mass, the bishop of Tui delivered the funeral oration. The remains were buried in the crypt of the chapel of San Telmo, the tomb of the bishops of Tui. On 28 April 1928, the body was exhumed and solemnly transferred to Lisbon, where he was buried on 30 April at the tomb of the patriarchs of the Monastery of São Vicente de Fora.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION. Martins de Carvalho's introduction occupies pp. [3]-25. The letters occupy pp. [27]-30.

António Cândido [Ribeiro da Costa (São Cristóvão de Candemil, Amarante, 1850-São Cristóvão de Candemil, Amarante, 1922)]—not to be confused with the twentieth-century Brazilian writer—was a significant Portuguese literary figure of the second half of the nineteenth century and early twentieth century. He took part in the polemic 'Questão Coimbrã' as a 15-year-old in 1865, while later joining in and commenting on the dinners of the 'Vencidos da Vida'. An outstanding orator, he was also a lawyer, parliamentary deputy, peer of the realm, and Vice-President of the Academia Real das Ciências de Lisboa.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION? The characters are Jozino, Jonia, Rorino, and Risseu.

José Daniel Rodrigues da Costa (1757-1832), a native of Leira, was a fervent supporter of D. Miguel. He held many government posts in Portugal and was a prolific writer: his works (the earliest of which dates to 1777) were very popular and often reprinted during his lifetime. Innocência uncharacteristically declines to catalogue all the author's works: 'Parece-me desnecessario além de difficil, apresentar aqui um catalogo geral de todas as suas producções.' Rodrigues da Costa was a poet of arcadismo, using the name Josino Leirense in the Nova Arcadia. His narrative poem O balão dos habitantes da lua (1819) is considered the first Portuguese work of science fiction.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION.

José Estêvão de Moraes Sarmiento (1843-1930), was a Portuguese army officer, retiring with the rank of General in 1919. Active in politics, he belonged to the Partido Regenerador, serving as Minister of War in 1896. From 1898 to 1904 he was Director of the Colégio Militar, which he had frequented from 1854 to 1861. An author and journalist, he founded the Diário Popular and was director of the Revista Militar.

Couceiro da Costa (Fataunços, São Pedro do Sul, 1830-Lisbon, 1911), had risen to the rank of Brigadier General at the time of his death. Son of the Barão do Paço de Couceiro, he completed his course work at the Colégio Militar in 1847. In 1856 he entered the army engineering corps, while in 1857 he began teaching at the Colégio Militar. In addition to having published several books, he wrote for the newspaper Diário popular, and the review Portugal Militar.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of this elogy for the Brazilian polymath, diplomat, writer, jurist, and politician Ruy Barbosa de Oliveira (1849-1923).

José Soares da Cunha e Costa (Lisbon, 1868-Lisbon, 1928), was a Portuguese lawyer, writer, journalist and translator, member of the Academia das Ciências de Lisboa. He held law degrees both from Coimbra University and the Faculdade de Direito de São Paulo. Portuguese consul at Santos, he wrote for O Século, Revista Brasil-Portugal, A Pátria, Voz Pública and O Mundo. He was a lawyer in two of the most notorious trials of his day, the crime of Serrazes, and that of the Banco Angola e Metrópole. Originally in favor of the establishment of the Portuguese Republic, having proposed a new constitution in 1911, by 1914 he was writing for monarchist newspapers such as A Nação and O Dia. During 1917-1918 he collaborated with Sidónio Pais, attacking the anti-clerical ideology of the First Republic and advocating reestablishment of relations between the Portuguese state and the Vatican.

on front wappers, title page, and rear wrapper. (2 ll.), 98 pp., (1 blank l.), 16 folding leaves with charts numbered I through XXXI. $600.00

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of what appears to be the author's first book. The title as given on the title page, above, differs from that on the front wrapper: Ensaio historico de Portugal. Apontamentos chronologicos da historia portugueze, antiga e moderna colligidos, coordenados e illustrados para uso das escolas.

The author, a native of Nova Goa (1846-1896), began to practice law at age 20. He was also active in municipal government of Portuguese India, and in education there, holding various administrative posts, as well as teaching philosophy, history and political economy at the Leceu de Nova Goa. From 1888 he was director of the Biblioteca Nacional de Nova Goa.

Provenance: Dantas (1876-1962) is one of the best known modern Portuguese writers. His major work, Ceia do cardenas, went through 48 editions from 1902 to 1962, with translations into French, Spanish, Catalan, Italian, English, German, Swedish, Danish and Japanese. Its influence may also be judged by the fact that Campos Ferreira Lima lists no fewer than 49 parodies. Trained as an army surgeon, Dantas later became president of the Academia das Ciências (1921) and Inspector das Bibliotecas Eruditas e Arquivos (1912). Dantas became a target of Almada Negreiros, whose Manifesto anti-Dantas, 1915, was one of the key documents proclaiming Portuguese Modernism.

In less than good condition (due to the wrappers being detached). Otherwise good. 8 pp. Portrait of the author on p. [3]. $30.00

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of this poem in honor of Herculano.

Freitas Guimarães was a member of the Academia Paulisa de Letras.

Alexander Herculano (1810-1877) is recognized as the greatest Portuguese historian of the nineteenth century, and one of the greatest that country or any other ever produced.

A complete volume of Innocência (XXI, by Brito da Aranha), is devoted to a bibliography and analysis of his works, which include Historia da origem e estabelecimento da Inquisição em Portugal, Lisbon 1854-59, and Historia de Portugal, Lisbon 1846-53. Herculano was a novelist as well as a poet and historian, publishing his first volume of poetry, A Voz de propheta, in 1832. His novel Eurico, 1844, is credited with introducing to Portugal the historical romance in the manner of Sir Walter Scott, which influenced Almeida Garrett and later authors.

[Paris]: Na Typografia de J. Tastu, n.d. [1829]. 8°, 43 pp. Caption title. Rather browned. In good condition.

FIRST EDITION. There was an edition published in Rio de Janeiro the following year with a dedication to the Portuguese emigrés signed by Antonio Gomes das Neves e Mello. An augmented edition appeared with the title A perfidia desmascarada ... as well as an English language edition, London, 1830. These observations gave rise of a prolonged polemic with Joaquim António de Magalhães, Francisco de Gama Lobo Botelho, Coronel Pizarro, and Albino Pimenta d'Aguiar. This pamphlet and the ensuing polemic relates to the rivalry between the Conde, later Marquês, and still later Duque de Saldanha and the Marquês, later Duque de Palmela, leaders of the two main factions of liberals in exile after D. Miguel was acclaimed King of Portugal in 1828, with the support of the absolutists. Saldanha was leader of the more radical liberal faction, while Palmela led the more moderate liberals. Both factions appealed to D. Pedro I, Emperor of Brazil, who had assigned his rights to the Portuguese throne to his daughter, D. Maria da Gloria, the future Queen D. Maria II. D. Pedro tended to favor Palmela, but needed Saldanha due to his superior military abilities. The rivalry between these two dominant figures of nineteenth-century Portuguese history continued until the death of Palmela in 1850. There was an edition published in Rio de Janeiro the following year with a dedication to the Portuguese emigrés signed by Antonio Gomes das Neves e Mello. An augmented edition appeared with the title A perfidia desmascarada ... as well as an English language edition, London, 1830.

João Carlos Saldanha de Oliveira Daun (1790-1876) was marshal of the liberal armies fighting for D. Maria II; he was raised to the rank of conde (1827; confirmed 1833), marquês (1834), and finally duque (1846). Ninth son of the 1.º Conde de Rio Maior and maternal grandson of the 1.º Marquês de Pombal, he was also one of the dominant personalities in Portuguese politics of his era, serving four times as president of the Council of Ministers and leading a half dozen coups d'état.

na Cidade do Porto nno dia 21 d'Agosto de 1829. Pelo autor da Injusta acclamaçam do Infante D. Miguel. Paris: na Typografia de J. Tastu, 1830. 8º, (1 l.), 93 pp. Contemporary ink manuscript author's presentation inscription in lower blank margin of title page: 'Ao Ill.^{mo} Sr. Martins [?] // o autor.' Small dampstain in upper blank margin of title page. In good to very good condition.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION. When D. Miguel seized the throne of Portugal in 1828 the then Marquês [later Duque] de Palmela sided with the opposition in Oporto and with them was forced to flee to England. D. Miguel had him and other leading opponents condemned to death in absentia and seized their estates, but Dom Pedro I, Emperor of Brazil, appointed Palmela guardian to his daughter, the rightful Queen Maria II, and he acted as her ambassador at the British court. In 1830 he set up the young queen's regency on Terceira in the Azores. The present work contains the judicial sentence passed by judges loyal to D. Miguel, refuted with extensive annotations.

António da Silva Lopes Rocha (1784-1842) obtained a law degree from Coimbra University, held several judicial posts, practiced law in Lisbon for a number of years, eventually belonged to the royal 'Conselho', and was auditor do Supremo Conselho de Justiça Militar. A partisan of the liberal cause, he appears to have spent some time in exile during the reign of D. Miguel.

In good to very good condition.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION. Contains much information relating to the regency in favor of D. Maria II established on the Island of Terceira in the Açores. An 'Appendix' occupies pp. 43-55. According to Innocência and Ernesto do Canto, some copies have a 'Segundo appendix' which takes up pp. 57-76.

The author (1798-1895), was born aboard ship off Cabo Verde, and subsequently baptized in Rio de Janeiro; his parents were en route to Minas Gerais, where his father was going to take up a post as ouvidor in the Villa of Príncipe. The recipient of a law degree from Coimbra in 1820, he held a number of judicial appointments while writing various literary and political works during the 1820s, having been one of the founders in 1821 of the O cidadão literato, periodico de politica e litteratura, Coimbra: Imprensa da Universidade. In political exile from 1828 to 1833, he was a deputy to the Portuguese Côrtes in various legislatures from 1834, and Minister of Justice and Ecclesiastical Affairs in 1852 and 1868. One of his greatest achievements was the Código civil português, commissioned by parliament in 1850, the finished product being presented in 1859. It was promulgated in 1867. A member of the Real Academia das Sciencias de Lisboa, he was created Visconde de Seabra in 1865, eventually serving as rector of Coimbra University (1866-1868). Throughout his Augusto Vidal de Castilho Barreto e Noronha (Lisbon, 1841-Lisbon, 1912), to whom this work is dedicated, was a Portuguese naval officer, son of António Feliciano de Castilho and brother of Júlio de Castilho. Governor-General of Moçambique from 1885 to 1889, later Civil Governor of the district of Porto, and Minister of Marinha e Ultramar from 4 February to 25 December 1908, he collaborated in the press and directed the Review Brasil-Portugal. He ended his career with the implantation of the Republic, having attained the rank of Major-general da Armada. As Comandante da corveta Mindello, Augusto de Castilho granted asylum to the Brazilian insurgents who had engineered a revolt of the fleet in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro on 13 March 1894. This incident is the subject of the present pamphlet.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION. Hintze Ribeiro (Ponta Delgada, 1849—Lisbon, 1907), was three times Prime Minister of Portugal during the reign of King D. Carlos I (23 February 1893 to 7 de February 1897; 26 June 1900 to 20 October 1904; and 19 March 1906 to 19 May 1906). One of the longest serving Prime Ministers in Portuguese History, politician, statesman, and nobleman, he was a prominent parliamentarian and Peer of the Realm, Attorney-General of the Crown, Minister of Public Works, of Finance and Foreign Affairs as well as uncontested leader of the Regenerator Party. He was one of the dominant politicians of the final years of the Portuguese Constitutional Monarchy, responsible for important reforms, some of which are still in effect, such as the insular autonomy for the Azores and Madeira islands (1895), the pharmacies' law, and forestry law (1901).

Francisco José Patrício (Vitória, Porto, 1850-Porto, 1911) secular priest, knight of the Order of Santiago, renowned sacred orator, and historical investigator. In addition to 3 volumes of published sermons collected under the title Trabalhos Oratórios, his Telas Românticas was a collection of various youthful writings, while he also published numerous articles in newspapers, such as Comércio Português, Jornal do Porto, Província, and Jornal da Manhã. Elected parliamentary deputy from Porto in 1881, from Viana do Castelo in 1896, then again from Porto in 1901 and 1904, he belonged to several learned societies, such as the Real Sociedade Humanitária do Porto, the Instituto de Coimbra, the Sociedade de Geografia de Lisboa, and the Sociedade dos Arqueólogos e Arquitectos Portugueses.

That the 1810 Treaty Between Portugal and Great Britain
Be Enforced*

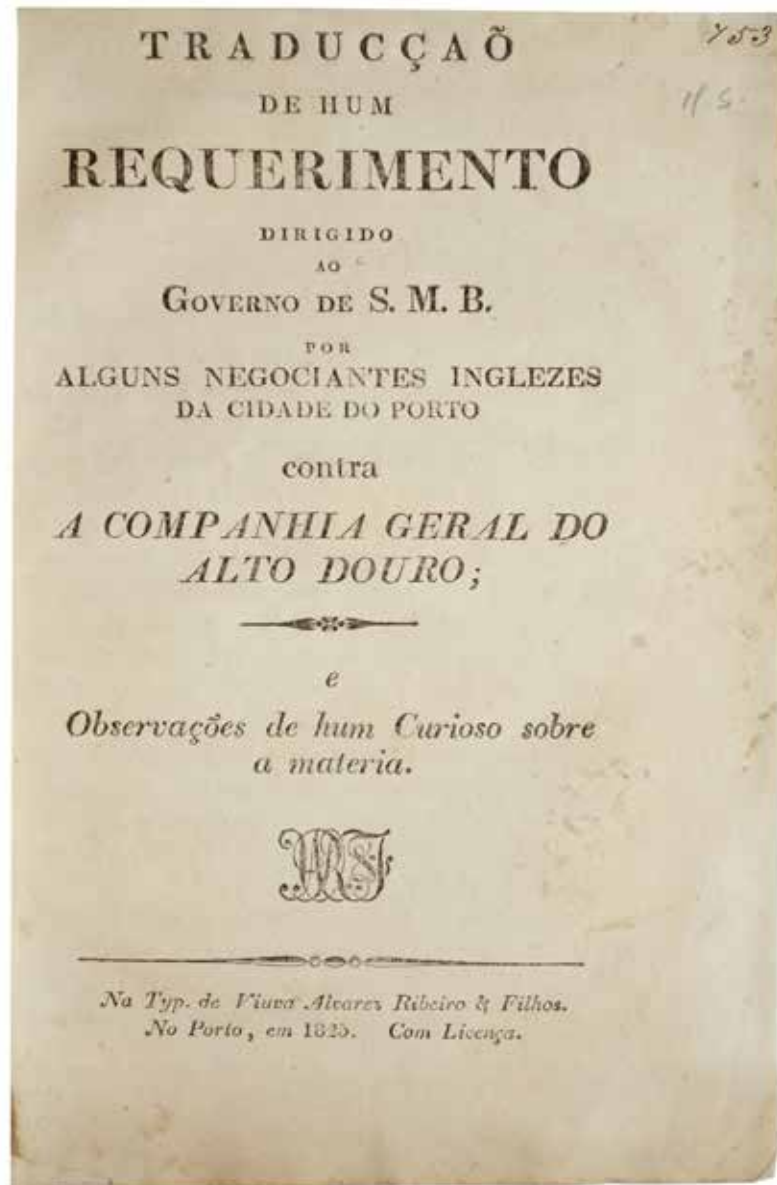

26. [PORTUGAL. Companhia Geral da Agricultura das Vinhas do Alto Douro]. Tradução de hum requerimento dirigido ao Governo de S.M.B. por alguns negociantes Inglezes da Cidade do Porto contra a Companhia Geral do Alto Douro; e observações de hum curioso sobre a materia. Porto: Na Typ. de Viuva Alvarez Ribeiro & Filhos, 1825. 8°, recent black and white marbled wrappers. Publisher's monogram on title page. A few running heads (pagination) slightly shaved. In good to very good condition. Old ink manuscript pagination, 753-792, in upper outer corners. 39 pp. Pages 5-12 in two columns, with original English text beside the Portuguese translation. $400.00

FIRST EDITION. On p. 12 appear the names of the fifteen individual Port wine merchants and firms signatory to the petition, including Offley Forrester Webber & C.°, Cambell Taylor & C.°, Cockburns Wauchope & C.°, John Bell & C.°, James Woodhouse, Geo. Sandeman & C.°, John Quilliman and T.G. Smith. In a letter to Foreign Secretary George Canning, they complain that the 1810 treaty between Portugal and Great Britain is not being enforced, and that the consequences 'threaten the total destructions of their Trade.' Among the complaints: they are not allowed to taste wines for themselves and choose which are appropriate for export; the prices set for wines exported to England are much higher than for wines exported elsewhere; and the prices set for brandy (agoardente) are outrageous.

The 'Observação geral' in the original Portuguese occupies pp. 13-39. It refutes point by point the petition of the British Port wine merchants, who had complained about the monopolistic practices of the Companhia Geral da Agricultura das Vinhas do Alto Douro, also known as the Real Companhia Velha.

The Portuguese government had been heavily involved in the wine trade since 1756, when the Marquês de Pombal established the Companhia, partly in an effort to limit long-standing British influence on the Port wine trade. It officially delineated the boundaries of the Douro wine region, regulated exports of Port, set production limits and prices, and was sole arbiter in disputes between producers and shippers. It also held a monopoly on the sale of brandy, used in the fortification process for making Port wine, and on the sale of the grape distillates bagajo or bagaceira (similar to grappa), which were sold in taverns in Porto and elsewhere, mostly for consumption by common people. Before the Companhia was finally dismantled in 1853, a number of attempts were made to reduce its influence, especially by liberals in sympathy with the middle and lower classes.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION of this contribution to the literature on cholera, with comments on the disease and on treating its early and advanced stages.

Lima Leitão (1787-1856), a major figure in Portuguese medicine, was born in Lagos (Algarve) and served as a physician with the French and the Portuguese armies from 1808 to 1814, before moving to Brazil. In 1816 he was sent from Rio de Janeiro to Mozambique, where he was chief physician, and from there in 1819 to India, to act as Intendente de Agricultura. Lima Leitão was a professor at the Royal School of Surgery in Lisbon, president of the Lisbon Society of Medical Sciences, and an active contributor to the Portuguese medical press. He served twice in the Cortes and published numerous works on medicine and politics, as well as some poetry and a translation of Virgil.

Author's three-line ink manuscript presentiaon inscription to Francisco António Rodrigues de Gusmão (first line partly cropped) in upper blank margin of title page. In very good condition.

FIRST and ONLY EDITION.

The author (1817-1904) was a physician-surgeon, Delegado do Connselho de Saude Pública do Reino no Districto Administrativo de Ponta Delgada, and Guada mór de saude in the Açores.

Provenance: Francisco António Rodrigues de Gusmão (1815-1888), physician and author, perhaps the most significant collaborator of Innocência Francisco da Silva in the course of the writing of the still indispensable Dicionário bibliographico portuguez. He presumably commissioned the binding. It was purchased in the auction of books owned by Rodrigues de Gusmão and Mário Tomás da Costa Roque (1932-1983), distinguished physician, the author of books on the history of medicine and on printing history, an important auction catalogue with 1,320 lots, sold 1 and 2 April, 1998. See Silva's and Pedro de Azevedo, Biblioteca de Francisco António Rodrigues de Gusmão e Mário Tomás da Costa Roque, Lisbon: Silva's, 1998. The introduction to the catalogue contains an extract from the Dicionário bibliographico about Rodrigues de Gusmão, and an essay by Joaquim Veríssimo Serrão about Costa Roque. FIRST and ONLY EDITION of this polemical missive in verse. Parliamentary deputy and former naval officer José Bento Ferreira d'Almeida had attacked the Ministro da Marinha, Henrique de Macedo inside the parliamentary chambers. He eventually served four months in prison. Ironically, after switching political parties, from the Partido Progressista to the Partido Regenerador, in 1895 he became Ministro da Marinha in the government of Hintze Ribeiro.

Angelina Vidal (1853 [sometimes given as 1847]-1917) was a progressive feminist Portuguese writer, journalist, republican propagandist, poet, playwright, teacher and editor noted for her support of the republic, women's rights and education for women. Responsible for at least two dozen books and pamphlets, she also wrote for weekly as well as daily newspapers, as well as for reviews. In 1886 she encouraged workers to campaign for a 12-hour day (at the time 15 hours was the norm). She was one of the first women in Portugal concerned with women's subordinate status and improving educational opportunities for Women.
