FIRST EDITION. The second issue, with leaves 2H2 and 2X2 in cancelled state, correcting a couple of potential libels on the Coutts family and Walter Little. [ECSB 717]. 762 copies of the book were published, but on publication the Coutts family initiated a lawsuit against Maitland as they thought they had been libelled by Maitland's comments concerning the supposed role of Lord Provost Coutts during a shortage of corn in 1740. The lawsuit was successful and the book had to be recalled from circulation so that the offending text could be removed. This resulted in the cancellation of leaf 2H2 to appease the Coutts family and leaf 2X2 was also cancelled due to a slighting reference to Walter Little. Maitland had distributed 213 of the 762 copies, mostly to the Edinburgh booksellers, thus the remaining 549 in stock had to have the offending leaves cancelled, while as many copies of those already distributed had to be recalled for the same purpose.

Edinburgh: [Bannatyne Club], 1824. pp. 21, (verso blank), cont. half brown morocco, marbled sides, gilt crest of the Marquis of Lothian.

Scott's facetious reference to the Roxburghe Club, that Society of select Bibliomaniacs, in the prefatory letter to Peveril of the Peak, led to the Author of Waverley's invitation to join the Club, which Scott, while still playing the Great Unknown, accepted. At the same time he was taking the leading part in the founding of the Bannatyne Club, named after George Bannatyne (1545 -1606?), whose rich collection of Scottish poetry, collected during his youth and compiled during the pestilence of 1568, preserved a mass of Scottish manuscript poetry that would otherwise have been lost. In Sir Walter's own words, Bannatyne accomplished nothing less than saving the literature of a whole nation. The new club, modelled on the Roxburghe example, was instituted to print works illustrative of the history, antiquities and literature of Scotland, as organised and financed by the members under expert editorship: an object it accomplished, by its final demise in 1867, to a far greater extent than had been contemplated by its original members. Scott was its founding president, and presided until his death; other founding members included the Chief Commissioner William Adam, Archibald Constable, Lord Eldin, James Maidment, Robert Pitcairn, Patrick Fraser Tytler, and David Laing, the Club's faithful and tireless Secretary from first to last. Its first dinner, March 9th 1823, was marked by the song which Scott composed for the occasion (item 1). He was also closely connected with the ninth and tenth Garlands (issued together: item 9). The Reeve's Penance, written by Robert Surtees of Mainsforth, Durham, had been printed at Scott's expense on Club paper c.1830, but never circulated. Sir Walter added Quod ane Gude Squyer of Northumberland. - R.S. of M. The other, Captain Ward and the Rainbow, was sent from Abbotsford to Laing on 17th September 1831, partly written in Scott's own hand and with an introductory note by him, shortly before he set out on his final journey in search of health. Most Club publications were limited to editions of about 100 copies, limited by the maximum number of Club members; the Garlands were however issued in even smaller numbers - probably no more than forty copies of any of them, limited to the numbers who would be able to attend the dinners at which they were distributed - over a period of twenty-five years. Largely because of their ephemeral nature, individual Garlands are scarce. Todd & Bowden 169A; Van Antwerp 21; K.D. Duval, Scott & His Scotland 971.

[ESTC T131328 for the 'Tractatus' listing only the map, as here, but mentioning a copy with more plates. An earlier catalogue note says that the description of the plates at the end of the 'Miscellanea' refers to the 3 plates already present in the third work of the 'Collection' and this would seem to be the case.

It is a mine of local information and a testament to the high quality of local talent and abilities available at that time. In addition to local members, the walks attracted conductors such as Dr. James Hunter, Professor Veitch, and the outstanding 19th century geologist Professor Geikie. The book contains a description of the excursions led by Professor Geikie to study the geology of the Manor Valley, on the 20th of July, 1889 and 25th of August, 1894. The other excursions cover a wide range of history, geology and botany.]
